PREFACE.

THE purpose of this little book may be briefly explained. It is designed to encourage the study of missionary work by helping the inquiring student over the first and most tedious part of his journey in the shortest time, and so enabling him more speedily to arrive at the information he is seeking. The book gathers up its information from many and varied sources. The compiler has labored under this difficulty, that he has had no guide in his work. This is, it is believed, the first attempt to present the subjects that follow in any one volume. This may not be complete; indeed, that could hardly be expected where the information must be secured from such widely-separated sources. Some societies do not publish any reports; others report only a small part of their work; and there is no homogeneous system of tabulating reports adopted by the various societies. Often, too, one meets the statement in the reports, "No returns for this year," and they must be supplied either from previous reports or from other sources. But this is as complete as we can make it at this time; the statistics, etc. are the latest obtainable at this date.

The book is a growth. It was prepared to meet frequent inquiries for the information here given. It may render the additional service of making each denomination acquainted with the missionary work of the rest, and so promoting "Christian comity." It may be of service to the Executive Boards of the various societies in enabling them to ascertain the best places to which they may send their newly-appointed missionaries.

A few words of explanation need to be added. The design of Part I. is to enable the student to locate, upon the maps of any ordinary atlas, any station where missionaries are living, and to save the necessity of purchasing costly missionary maps or atlases. Sub-stations are not given, as their number is so great, and their enumeration would only serve to confuse the student. The list of stations where missionaries reside, and their positions, will be found to be accurate and complete. In this Part, as in Parts II. and III., the stations and statistics of missions and missionaries in Europe (excepting only Turkey), the United States, and Canada are not given, for these belong, properly, to Home Mission work, and are without the province of this Manual.

Part II. is designed to enable the missionary inquirer to see at a glance just what forces of what societies are at work in any and all the stations of any given missionary field. The population and statistical tables are added to show what is needed to be done, and what has been and is being accomplished, in each country. In Asia these are given in detail; in Africa, America (exclusive of the United States and Canada), and Oceanica, collectively.

As Part I. answers the question, Where are the missionaries at work? Part II., What are they doing? and Part III., What is the church at home doing for the missionary work?

so Part IV. is designed to answer the question, Where can I learn more about missionary lands, about heathen peoples, their customs and religions, and about the missionary work and workers? But a few books in foreign languages are included in the list of works on missionary topics. Undoubtedly, there are some in the English language which have been omitted, and which should have been included. This may be corrected at some future time.

The romantic age of missions has passed away; this is the age of inquiry. Information is eagerly sought for, and when found serves to deepen the interest in the missionary work. If this little book shall have any part in this, the compiler will feel amply repaid for the severe toil of its preparation. Yet it has been a labor of love, and greatly lightened by the kindness of many friends, by the readiness with which the secretaries of the various societies responded to requests for reports, and by the helpful assistance of one without whose aid the book would probably never have been completed.

FRANK S. DOBBINS.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION (established 1846) has expended in Africa in 1879-80, $11,802. Thirteen missionaries in Africa.

* Including statistics of all missions (including those in Europe and America) mentioned in the following tables. As a few of these are not brought to date, and as, in addition, there are a few societies whose statistics we have not been able to gather, it is certain that the totals here given under-estimate the missionary forces and contributions. It must be remembered also that these statistics were reported to the various societies by their missionaries some months before the reports were published; hence these figures represent the force in the field at, say, the close of the year 1879, though the statistics are the latest ascertainable up to April 1, 1881. The contributions of the Women's Societies are generally included in the income of the main societies to which they are auxiliary.
